

Penguins spend half of their life on land and the other half swimming in the water, so their wings have changes to act like flippers which makes them greater swimmers.